

The Future Minerals Forum connects global policy-makers with investors and business leaders across the mining value chain and its supporting industries. The Future Minerals Forum is the first government-led initiative that featured a diversified international and organizational representation with more than 2,000 conference delegates and attendees from 95+ countries attended and met with leaders from the Middle East, Central Asia, and North and Central Africa. In addition, speakers from around the world offered their unique insights regarding the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia being the geographic center for three resource-rich regions and, as a global trading hub, aiming to become a gateway and enabler of development by leveraging its financial resources.'
